FIRST AMERICAN DATTO

Captain Pershing an Honored Chief Among the Moros.

RANKS WITH THE PRINCES OF SULU

American Commander in Iligan, a Former Chicago Society Man, Occupies Remarkable Position Among the Natives of Mindanao Island—He is Hailed as a Prophet.

After falling in love with an American girl whom he had never seen Kilan, the sentimental sultan of Sulu, has issued a mandate and heaped honors upon the head of a Chicago man, says a dispatch from Chicago to the New York Herald. Every day in Iligan, in the Lake Lanao district of the far away island of Mindanao, Captain John J. Pershing calls about him the dusky inhabitants and dispenses what little law he has to guide him. Captain Pershing is what Kilan calls a datto. A datto is a bigger man in Iligan than the mayor is in Chicago, and Captain Pershing is the first American to become a datto.

The present datto of Iligan was formerly a well known bachelor of Kenwood, and there he led many a cotton and created many a flutter in one of the smartest circles. He was one of the eligibles. But he went to war, and now he is a datto as well as a bachelor. He was chosen by the sultan upon request of the latter's subjects and has the same rank as the princes of Sulu enjoy.

To be a datto is almost as interesting as being the sultan himself. Datto Pershing is subject to the commands of the sultan—that is, so far as is commensurate with his duty to the stars and stripes. But in spite of the fact that the sultan of Sulu is supreme in authority Captain Pershing is virtually an independent ruler in his own district of Lake Lanao, wielding a kind of mystic power over the Moros which not even the sultan himself may boast of. For Datto Pershing is a white man, and the pale skin of Americans is an awesome thing to Moro superstition. He has been hailed as a "prophet," as a divine messenger, sent by Mohammed and the president of the United States to teach them the ways of civilization.

Datto Pershing's councilors held each morning with Moro chiefs are famed from corner to corner of Mindanao, and a continual procession of savages visits the white man's tent. He is counselor, guide and prophet for the entire district, and every conceivable kind of business, both private and public, is taken to him for adjustment.

When General Davis, commanding the department of Mindanao and Jolo, sent Pershing to Iligan as commanding officer, he selected one of the most efficient officers in his command to preside over the turbulent district of Lake Lanao. Datto Pershing's levees are more like family councils than anything else. The swarthy, brilliant-eyed Moro belles bring gifts of tropical fruits and rare woven textures to lay at his feet. Their attitude toward him is one of worshipful adoration. Mothers carry their children to him to receive his commendation, for it is said that the favor of Datto Pershing will insure a bright future. He lives on terms of friendliness with the natives, and his very unpretentious bearing, his very apparent attitude of friendliness, won them from the beginning, and they made him their chief officer when they found that rule with him meant kindness, sympathy and understanding. Alone and unarmed, he ventured into the district which he commands, establishing himself there at the very doorstep of the Moro stronghold. His very coolness won their admiration, and when they found that he had come as a friend instead of an enemy it won them unconditionally.

The savage Moros appreciate genuine friendship. They know the datto is in sympathy with them, for he has paid them the compliment of respecting their customs, and they carry their grievances and their difficulties to him as children would to a parent. His rule seems to be absolute without exception. They go to him for permission to marry, even persons of distinction showing him this confidence. He stands sponsor at the wedding, settles differences between ranchmen and is judge, ruler and friend in one. He rules by persuasion mainly, and thus all respect and reverence for him because he has taken the trouble to come in touch with them and to understand them. When he sits in council with the Moro chiefs in a circle about him, they hang upon his words in rapt attention and follow his requests to the letter.

So firmly fixed is he in this respect that the Chicago bred datto may venture with impunity into any fortified stronghold under Moro command. Leaders from all parts of the country crowd about him when he ventures out of Iligan. He has had judgment enough to flunk of no religion save their Mohammedan beliefs, and he quotes the Koran with them daily and discusses their own laws better than the best informed priest or pandita among them. He has placed them upon their honor in carrying out his orders.

His influence is so strong that he makes periodical expeditions about the lake with a mere handful of men, passing en route under the very gates of Binocol, the native stronghold, venturing among ranchmen where the inhabitants have never seen a white man, and he is invariably received with barbaric pomp and ceremony. At an outbreak of hostilities in Mindanao he held the North Lake Moros out of the resisting force solely by personal influence.
